

mission statement

Ipsi magazine is an Australian based non-profit organization that is committed to connecting, empowering and involving young people in their communities through providing them with accurate information on issues they care about, and opportunities to take action.

Vision:

We envisage a world in which young Australians play an active, important and recognised role in creating and effecting positive change in fields of social, cultural and economic development and entrepreneurship. We see this as being achieved through improved communication and interaction between active young Australians, the community and youth sectors, and through the support, encouragement and promotion of youth-driven and -oriented initiatives.

Purpose:

- to offer a youth-oriented perspective on important local and global issues.
- to increase young people's awareness of opportunities and developments in the community
- to promote youth-led and -oriented initiatives
- to involve young people in their communities
- to portray a positive and inspirational image of young people in the media
- to connect young people with dreams and ideas to those with similar visions
- to empower young people to create change themselves

Principles:

- Free expression of ideas by readers and members
- That young people are capable of affecting positive change in the community
- That awareness and understanding are prerequisites to making constructive change.
